

Long Term Access Review - Project Consultation Report

- The Long Term Access Review workstream is investigating whether the fundamentals of the Capacity Regime as we know it today are still appropriate and desired for a different energy landscape that we expect to see by 2030.
- A consultation last year helped to develop and agree the functions of the capacity regime.
- A second consultation document has now been published outlining thinking and discussions so far.
- Stakeholders are invited to feedback views on scenario and solution options by 30th November 2021.
- The consultation has been distributed by the JO and ENA and is also available to view on the National Grid Future of Gas webpage.
- There will be engagement events planned and communicated in the coming weeks.
